

Dr Garry Barron is originally from New Zealand, where he attended the University of Otago. He undertook his advanced cardiology training at Christchurch Hospital and Princess Margaret Hospital in Christchurch, New Zealand. In 1996 Garry moved to Australia to undertake a fellowship in interventional cardiology at Monash Medical Centre, Clayton for two years.

Garry was the Director of the Cardiac Catheterisation Laboratory at Dandenong Hospital for four years and the Director of the Cardiac Catheterisation laboratory at the Valley Private Hospital for many years. His interests are in general cardiology and coronary interventions. Garry has managed the cardiological care of patients with general practitioners in the south east area of Melbourne for over 12 years.

- Interventional cardiology
- Coronary artery disease
- General cardiology